A tornado is as a rotating, funnel-shaped cloud that extends from a thunderstorm to the ground with whirling winds that can reach 300 mph.

Damage paths of tornadoes can be in excess of one mile wide and 50 miles long.

Rotating thunderstorms are the best predictors of tornado activity. They are well defined thunderstorms on radar that may include hail, severe winds, lightning, or flash floods.

Most twisters or cyclones travel from southwest to northeast and can move in the opposite direction for short periods of time. A tornado can even backtrack if it is hit by winds from the eye of the thunderstorm.

Twisters strike predominantly along Tornado Alley — a flat stretch of land from western Texas to North Dakota. This region is a hotspot for tornadoes because the dry polar air from Canada meets the warm moist tropical air from the Gulf of Mexico.

Tornadoes are most likely to occur between 3 pm and 9 pm but can occur at any time.

In the southern states, peak tornado occurrence is March through May, while peak months in the northernmost states are late June through August.

NOTICE!

The Bedside Call Button should NEVER be tied to the bed.

This device is intended to be clipped to clothing or bed linens within reach of the resident. Twisting, knotting or otherwise restricting this cord can potentially cause damage to the device. Once damaged the device may fail to function.

In the rare event that a resident would have to be moved from the room while still in their bed, a tied cord can restrict movement of the bed and thereby delay evacuation of the resident from the room.

Thank You
